Adam met with me personally a few times throughout the semester and was really helpful in outlining important concepts. I appreciated him taking the time out of his schedule to help me understand macro concepts! / / Good communication throughout semester via announcements

Make an effort to get a clearer understanding from the professor about expectations, test style, etc. I understand that being a TA is not your primary task, since you're a PhD student, but you still ought to strive to help your students as much as you can.

Because the professor's lectures were extremely unclear, it was instrumental for us to attend the TA discussion sessions just to get a sense of what was going on inside the class. Adam helped clear up a lot of concepts, and if it were not for him this class would have been confusing beyond understanding. Also, I don't know why, but Clement Lee was by far the most helpful TA in this class, and he does not seem to be listed on the above list. He deserves a lot of credit for helping out students in so many different ways. By far the best UGA TA I've seen in any class so far.

I think had the class been more organized things would have been more clear, but also think this was something beyond Adam's direct control.

Adam was great. He did a great job of explaining the concepts we covered in class in a more understandable way. I found the professor for the class very difficult to understand and not very organized. I think this put a lot of stress on Adam as he was the head TA, but I thought he did a good job overall and definitely helped me understand the concepts.

Whenever I sent an email, he got back to me with a thoughtful and helpful response. I never met with him for office hours (saw another TA for that, who was great).
