

The Duke Narrative Medicine Colloquium 2018

What

The Narrative Medicine Colloquium is a year-long exploration of the Duke activities and programs that give faculty, caregivers, students, and others the opportunity to reflect on their lives through stories.

The colloquium is also a focused effort to look for new ways to build narrative into the research, medical education, clinical care, and employee health at Duke.

It's especially a chance to ask how narrative can strengthen the resiliency of us all.

Who

This colloquium is open to all Duke faculty members, medical trainees and students, nursing students, undergraduates, staff, and others who are interested in narrative medicine.

When

The colloquium will begin with 2 meetings to inventory and review current activities, followed by 3 structured meetings to outline and discuss new opportunities. In addition, we will schedule 3-5 interactive sessions to showcase readings, storytelling, and other narrative performances.

- Inventory meetings: February and March
- Structured discussion and presentation meetings: May, August, September
- Interactive sessions: April, July, November

How

The colloquium receives support from the School of Medicine Interdisciplinary Colloquia Program.

Learn more

Visit <http://dukenarrative.blog/> to find the latest details for meetings, events, and narrative medicine opportunities.

Join the mailing list at <https://lists.duke.edu/sympa/info/narrativemed>

Contact

Anton Zuiker is colloquium coördinator. Contact Anton at 919-613-4310 or anton.zuiker@duke.edu.

Steering Group

- David Pisetsky, MD, Department of Medicine
- Deborah Jenson, PhD, Franklin Humanities Institute
- Megan Dupuis, MD, Internal Medicine Residency Program
- Ray Barfield, MD, Trent Center for Bioethics, Humanities & History of Medicine
- Nikki Vangsnes, Trent Center for Bioethics, Humanities & History of Medicine
- Megan von Isenburg, MS, Medical Center Library and Archives