Keynote

Fostering High Quality Connections

Katherine Nobles, Leadership Development Coach

Rebuilding community in the new world of work begins with sparking high quality connections – brief interactions marked by mutual positive regard, trust, and engagement. Attendees will learn four pathways to systematically create high quality connections. Together we will practice the art of building high-quality connections and re-design roles and routines to foster them.

Katherine is the founder of Readily, a coaching and development firm dedicated to developing empowered employees, positive leaders, and thriving organizations. With over a decade of experience in the field, she's coached thousands of people across different backgrounds, industries, and locations – from North Carolina to the startup world of Silicon Valley.

A former career educator and lecturer at Stanford University and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, she's led hundreds of workshops and taught several courses focused on career and professional development. A Professional Certified Coach through the International Coaching Federation, she holds a B.A. in Communication from Virginia Tech and M.Ed. in Educational Leadership from The College of William & Mary.
