

Social and Economic Life in Seventeenth-Century Istanbul: Glimpses from Court Records

Edited by Timur Kuran

In the seventeenth century, when the modern global economy began to take shape, what institutions governed socio-economic life in the Eastern Mediterranean? Were the region's traditional economic institutions in flux?

This ten-volume set, 6,431 pages in length, presents original historical sources that are helping to generate answers to the above questions.

The books are the culmination of a data-gathering project initiated in 2003 as part of research that led to The Long Divergence: How Islamic Law Held Back the Middle East.

The set contains Ottoman-Turkish transliterations, along with English and modern Turkish summaries, of thousands of cases found in 15 seventeenth-century Islamic court registers from Istanbul, then the capital of the Ottoman Empire and the commercial center of the Eastern Mediterranean.

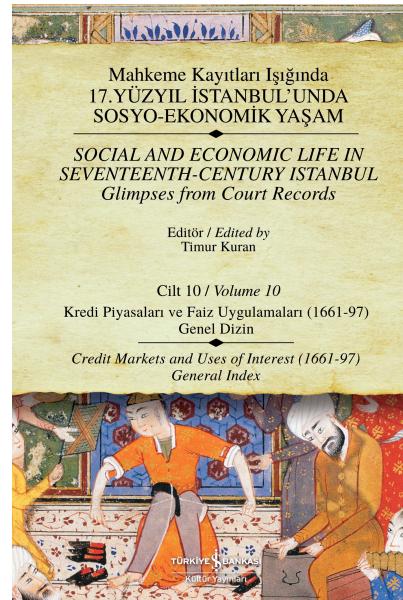

The cases are grouped under seven topical headings:

1. Guilds and Guildsmen (Vol. 1)
2. Communal Affairs of Christians and Jews (Vol. 1)
 - 3. Foreigners (Vol. 1)
4. Commercial Partnerships (Vol. 2)
5. State-Individual Relations, including Taxation (Vols. 3-4)
 - 6. Waqfs (Vols. 5-8)
7. Credit Markets and Uses of Interest (Vols. 9-10)

Vol. 10 contains general indexes in both Turkish and English.
